Abstract

While Brexit was initially planned to take place on 29 March 2019, negotiations between the European Union (EU) and the United Kingdom (UK) are still under way. Among Brexit's biggest controversies is the so called backstop as foreseen by the withdrawal agreement. Yet, even if the UK eventually agrees to the Brexit deal, negotiations on future EU-UK relations will be no less challenging. What are the greatest challenges in the Brexit talks? And, what are possible scenarios for future EU relations with the UK? We review the latest state in the Brexit negotiations and discuss alternatives for the EU's future relations with the UK.
